Abstract - In drug discovery, the foremost challenging task is predicting drug-disease correlation using drugs' various indications and side effects on specific diseases for proper diagnosis. To combat this issue, Wasserstein Auto-Encoder with Convolutional Neural Network (WAE-CNN) model was developed, which uses the side effects constraints along with the drugs and patient attributes from the large-scale databases to predict drugs for specific diseases. But, the correlation variability between several drug-disease side effect categories is quite unfair. Few categories are more complex to predict than others. Therefore, this article presents a Hierarchical Fuzzy Deep CNN (HFDCNN) model to predict and recommend drugs for particular diseases considering side effects. First, the database is created by collecting data about patients, diseases, drugs and their side effects. Then, such data are fed to the HFDCNN for prediction. In the HFDCNN model, FDCNN is embedded into the attribute hierarchy. It segregates simple classes using a coarse classifier, whereas fine classifiers differentiate complex classes. In the learning phase, an element-wise pre-learning is supported by global fine-tuning with a multinomial logistic loss normalized by a coarse coherence factor. Also, conditional executions of fine classifiers and layer variable reduction make this HFDCNN more robust for many disease data associated with the drugs and their side effects. Finally, the test results exhibit that the HFDCNN model achieves 95.3%, 97.1% and 98.55% of accuracies in predicting the drugs for Chronic Kidney Disease (CKD), diabetes and heart diseases, correspondingly compared to the classical models.

1. Introduction

Data mining is used to find crucial hidden patterns in massive datasets. Machine learning, soft computing, data visualization, classifications, and regression approaches are used to handle some of the difficulties in data mining. This area of study is well-known because it produces superior outcomes. However, it is all centered on a few illness analysis, diagnosis, or prediction approaches employing diverse instruments and methodologies. Few studies have been undertaken on illness drug prediction [1-3]. There are two sorts of medications used in the medical field: generic and brand-name pharmaceuticals. Generic medications are comparable to brand-name pharmaceuticals in terms of dose, intended use, dosage forms, side effects, safeguards, and weight. Alternatively, they have similar pharmacological effects as their brand-name counterparts. Patients will be given a specific medicine based on the severity of their diseases [4-5].

Over the past decades, many investigations have been done using data mining algorithms to predict the appropriate drugs for specific diseases [6-7]. This viewpoint suggests the drug prediction for diabetes, asthma and chronic heart diseases [8]. For this purpose, many drugs and patient characteristics were initially retrieved. Then, Hidden Markov Models (HMM) were utilized to uncover hidden correlations between features. After that, feature statistical values were computed and merged.

Moreover, Artificial Neural Network (ANN) was used to process the detected characteristics. To predict drugs for illnesses with fewer side effects, the ANN employed higher weight values assigned to each node in the hidden layers during the training stage. The ANN-based classifier suffers from excessive computational complexity when faced with many features.

Physical traits and illness side effects of patients alter throughout time. As a result, attribute values change over time. A strategy [9] was carried out for selecting more relevant features in optimally split time intervals. The Krill Herd (KH) method [10] was used to calculate the temporal interval for feature selection. The KH algorithm was developed to choose the most discriminative features from a

Abstract

Over the past two decades, educators, employers, and policymakers have increasingly placed great emphasis on the development of life skills as a way to prepare young people for success in today's rapidly changing and globalized world. However, the range of how different organizations define life skills is vast. For example, the WHO has defined life skills as “abilities for adaptive and positive behavior that enable individuals to deal effectively with the demands and challenges of everyday life,” while UNICEF has defined them as a “large group of psychosocial and interpersonal skills that can help people make informed decisions, communicate effectively, and develop coping and self-management skills that may help lead a healthy and productive life.”

Keywords: NGOs, best practices, model and leadership life skills

Introduction

In the present Knowledge based economy, young population is the greatest assets for a nation and is regarded as potential and actual investment for a country's development. India is enjoying demographic dividend with good young resource than any other country in the world, or the youth's namely Social skills, Communication skills, Higher-order thinking, Self-control and Positive self-concept. The paper findings include the three best successful and sustainable models for youth development in offering the life skill education to youth.

Objectives of the Study

1. To know about the role of a Non - governmental organization in youth development.
2. To study about youth development models and leadership styles offered by NGOs
3. To identify the types life skill education offered by the NGOs in Madurai City

Methodology

The researcher interviewed the head of the institutions of three NGOs namely Nehru Yuva Kendra IFRD, Madurai, Vidiyal Trust Madurai and Dhan Foundation Madurai, who explained in detail how the life skills categories by them have yielded results. The researcher interviewed the Co-coordinator of Nehru Yuva Kendra, Madurai district. Five youths from each institution who were involved in these trainings were interviewed on random basis, of which three were girls and two boys. Thus in total 80 youths were interviewed of whom 20 youths from each organization selected. On random basis 10 boys and 10 girls respondents were selected from each organization. Informal discussions were held with the head of the institutions and a structured interview schedule was administered to the youths who all were college students.

Organization Profile of the study Area

Nehru Yuva Kendras were established in the year 1972 with the objective of providing rural youth avenues to take part in the process of nation building as well providing opportunities for the development of their personality and skills, where Nehru Yuva Kendras have been set up. NYKS has targeted to identify areas of harnessing youth power for development by forming Youth Clubs, which are village level voluntary action groups of youth at the grassroots level to involve them in nation building activities. The core strength of NYKS lies in its network of youth clubs. Youth Clubs are village based organizations working for community development and youth empowerment.

SOCIAL-ECONOMIC STATUS OF WOMEN EMPLOYEES WORKING IN THE GARMENT INDUSTRY IN TIRUPUR DISTRICT

UGC CARE
APPROVED

ABSTRACT

A nation's destiny is primarily determined by the role of women in its economy. At the same time, men's paid employment increases, and women's incomes and salaries rise. There are still many issues that women confront because of the wage gap. A woman's role has evolved enormously and is now making the most significant impact on our society today. Today's civilization would be unimaginable without the contributions of women, who are making significant strides in many fields. Women make up 82.5% of the garment industry's workforce, making it labor-intensive. Women in Tiruppur's garment business were the focus of this investigation. A woman's social and economic standing are intertwined, and the latter depends on her ability to participate in the economy.

Keywords : Women employees, economic development, workforce, Garment industry, Organization

Introduction

The contribution of female employees is critical to the company's success. The socio-economic status of a person or household is a measure of how well off they are relative to other people in terms of their resources, such as their income, level of education, and the professional position. Women's empowerment is a social action in which they advance and re-create what was previously denied. Women's economic empowerment refers to the degree to which they can control their financial lives, including their access to and use of resources, assets, income, and free time, as well as their capacity to mitigate economic risk and improve their financial position. Women are increasingly becoming more potent in their families, communities, workplaces, and organizations due to employment in the garment industry. Their socio-economic standing is influenced by the amount of money she makes from work and other aspects of her personal life.

Factors that Affect the Socio-economic of the Women Employees

1. Women Education

Socio-economic growth depends critically on the education of women. They aim to empower and educate women to contribute to a more productive and self-sufficient workforce. Socio-economic development is accelerated by education and employment opportunities for the next generation. Women's education boosted economic growth because of their enhanced productivity and greater independence. Women's ability to earn living increases as their educational attainment rises. For families and the country, women's income provides a means of sustaining themselves. It demonstrates that obtaining a good education, finding a job, and earning a living contribute to a more prosperous society.

2. Socio-economic Development of Women

Gender equity is not one of these things. Since women were instrumental in the country's economic and social development, this is terrible. Women's education and self-sufficiency have been a principal focus in many countries worldwide. Women can significantly contribute to the economy's productivity, providing equal access to education. Women have a role to play in ensuring the well-being of the nation. In urban and rural areas, women should be allowed to make a positive difference in their communities and the country's growth.

3. Working Conditions

Job satisfaction is influenced by the workplace's physical environment, including the circumstances of the workplace and the accompanying amenities for performing the job. People are happier in their careers when these conditions are favorable.

ABSTRACT : Employee turnover as an expression is broadly used in enterprise organisation. This research aims to recognize the causes of employee turnover and retention techniques in an agency. Key studies findings indicate that employees have several motives to go away their offices, which include job strain, activity delight, job security, work surroundings, motivation, wages and rewards. Furthermore, worker turnover has a huge effect on an employer due to the fees related to worker turnover and might negatively impact the productiveness, competitiveness and profitability of an agency. As advising some feasible procedures, which can be carried out through top employers to ensure that employees will preserve of their respective agencies to beautify organizational effectiveness and productivity. But, the corporation have to recognize the needs of its personnel, on the way to help companies, adopt certain strategies to enhance employee overall performance and decrease employee turnover .

INTRODUCTION

Employee turnover or employee turnover rate is the measurement of the number of employees who leave an organization during a specified time period, typically one year. While an organization usually measures the total number of employees who leave turnover can also apply to subcategories within an organization like individual departments or demographic groups. It includes those who exit voluntarily as well as employees who are fired or laid off- that is, involuntary turnover. Causes include problems with the company's culture, its benefits and compensation structure, its career path and training, managers and much more. High voluntary turnover impacts profitability and often, and customer.

Employee turnover is the loss of talent in the workforce over time. This includes any employee departure, including resignations, layoffs, terminations, retirements, location transfers, or even deaths.

EFFECTS OF THE LABOUR TURNOVER:

There must be some labour turnover due to personal and unavoidable causes. It has been observed by employers that a normal labour turnover, which is between 3% and 5% , need not cause much anxiety. But a high labour turnover is always detrimental to the organization. The effect of excessive labour turnover is low labour productivity and increased cost of production. This is due to the following reasons.

- ❖ Frequent changes in the labour force give rise to interruption in the continuous flow of production are reduced.
- ❖ New worker take time to become efficient. Hence lower efficiency of new workers increases the cost of production.
- ❖ Selection and training cost of new workers recruited to replace the workers who have left increase the cost of production.
- ❖ New workers being unfamiliar with the work give more scrap, rejects and defective work which increase the cost of production.
- ❖ New workers being inexperienced workers cause more depreciation of tools and machinery.

ABSTRACT—Data mining technique has resulted in the discovery of useful hidden patterns from massive databases. The problems of data mining are cracked using some different approaches such as machine learning, data visualization, soft computing and classification techniques. The diagnosis or prediction of diseases is done by using different tools and techniques. But there are less number of researches has been carried out in the area of prediction of drug based on drug- disease interaction. In this paper, drug names for chronic disease, diabetic and heart disease are predicted based on the interaction between drug and disease. Initially, features related to drugs and patients are collected and the hidden relations among the features are predicted by using Hidden Markov Model (HMM). In HMM, each state represents the features and the probability value between states represents the hidden relation between features. Moreover, statistical measures such as the mean, the standard deviation (SD), skew and the kurtosis were calculated and added as additional features to remediate the accuracy of the prediction of drug for a disease. These features are given as the input for the Artificial Neural Network (ANN) algorithm which predicts the drug names for chronic kidney disease, diabetic and heart disease with a side effect constraint. The ANN with side effect constraints recommends a drug name with fewer side effects. The experiments are conducted to prove the effectiveness of the proposed ANN with side effect constraint method in terms of accuracy, precision and recall.

I. INTRODUCTION

A drug or medicine [1] is referred as a chemical substance of known structure, other than the necessitous nutrient of the dietary ingredient. It is also known as a medicine or medication used for diagnosing, curing or preventing a disease or promoting well-being. In medicinal field, there are two types of drugs are available such as generic and the brand name medicines. Every medicine has an approved generic name. If it is made by several companies, each will also give the medicine brand name. So one medicine may have a generic name and also have one or more of the brand names [2]. In Generic name, each of the medicine that has an appropriate name called the generic name. A group of consistent medicines that have homogeneous actions often have therelated generic names. For example, the drugs amoxicillin, phenoxymethylpenicillin, flucloxacillin and ampicillin are in one homogeneous group of the antibiotics. In Brand name, many different kinds of medicines which can have one or more brand names is selected by the company which procreate that. The different manufacturer can make the same kind of generic medicines, each with their own brand names. For example, paracetamol is the generic name of the medicine. There are multiple manufactures who can make this kind of generic medicine with brand names such as Panadol®, Calpol®, etc.

In other words, the Generic name drugs are the replication of brand-name drugs that have exactly the compatible properties of the brand name drugs. The consequences of pharmacological drugs such as the generic name drugs are literary the same as those of their brand-name equivalent. The drug effect may be different for an individual since drug can interact with the other drug i.e., drug-drug interaction [3], or food and beverages i.e., drug-nutrient interaction [4] or the other disease that a person has i.e., drug-disease interaction [5]. Sometimes the effects of drug interactions are dangerous. The interaction may cut or raise the actions of one or more drugs, which may lead to either failed diagnosis or side effects. Primarily, the prescribed drug for a specific happening could aggravate the other co-existing disease, however how can the disease mitigate the predicted drug efficiency is not often confer. The interaction of drug and disease may happen in any age group such as babies, younger people and older. But these are common among older people, who tend to have more number of diseases.

Sometimes, drugs used for one disease leads to other disease. For example, some kind of beta-blockers specially taken for the heart disease would provoke asthma (chronic) and could make it difficult for people those who have diabetes when their blood sugar level is too low. Some kind of drugs taken for managing a common cold may aggravate glaucoma [6]. Generally, poor bladder control, insomnia, low or high blood pressure level, and an enlarged prostate, glaucoma, ulcer and diabetes are significant, since the people with those diseases' symptoms are highly to have a drug-disease interaction. With the limited information, recent Abstract: In image processing applications pre-processing the image is the most crucial step. It is essential to eliminate the noise of the image and enhance its quality for further processing. This paper proposes a novel idea to de-noise the image using the Dilated Convolution Neural Network model with Mixed Activation Functions (DCNMAF). Performance Evaluation is done based on the metrics PSNR and SSIM and the proposed model out performs other methods with higher PSNR and SSIM values.

1. Introduction

In image processing, Noise is an undesired information that degrades image quality and should be eliminated. Noise removal is the pre-processing stage for many applications. Noise is a major obstacle for automatic image understanding. Noise reduction is essential because it improves image quality and makes it more suitable for subsequent processing. Image de-noising is a vital task in image processing for image analysis [1]. The de-noising model is a technique used to remove unnecessary data from images; different images are denoised using various methods. In this paper, a new model named Dilated Convolution Neural Network model with Mixed Activation Functions is proposed and used as image pre-processing method to minimize noise in images.

This paper is organized as follows, Section 2 briefly reviews the existing De-Noiseing techniques. Section 3 describes the methodology along with the comparison of existing methods. Experimental results are discussed in Section 4. Performance Evaluation is done in Section 5 and finally conclusion is presented in Section 6.

2. Literature Review

A number of filtering techniques have been proposed to remove the noise in an image.

Afrah Ramadhan et al. [2] proposed a new method of image de-noising using median filter (MF) in the wavelet domain. The method employs median filter and adaptive wavelet threshold, using different types of wavelet transform filters. It achieves better PSNR values compared to that of applying DWT or median filter only.

B. K. Shreyamsha Kumar [3] proposes a mixture of NLM (Non-Local Means) filter and noise thresholding using wavelets for image denoising. The application of NLM filter on the noisy image removes the noise and cleans the edges without losing too many fine structures and details.

Zhang M et.al., [4] proposed an extension of the bilateral filter named as multi-resolution bilateral filter, where bilateral filtering is applied to low-frequency subbands of a signal decomposed using an orthogonal wavelet transform. The authors proposed this new image denoising framework by combining with specific wavelet thresholding technique.

Zhe Liu et al. [5] have used a CNN model in deep learning for image denoising. Their proposed linear CNN model uses nine convolution kernels and each output color component is composed with the convolutional outputs of all input color components and multiple convolution kernels. The proposed CNN model can effectively remove Gaussian noise and improve the performance of traditional image filtering methods significantly.

Ghose et al. [6] used the pre trained denoising model because CNN model can be optimized continuously and the weights of convolutional kernel can be improved during training of the network. Authors also have analysed the results and compared them with Wiener filtering, Bilateral filtering, PCA, Wavelet based denoising method and observed that CNN based denoising method shows best performance than all other compared methods.
